Says Salim Ali, "It is seldom one gets an opportunity in life to do what one wants to do. I think the best results are those when you are doing something worthwhile which you enjoy doing with the motivation of maternal reward." It was his sincerity that won him many awards and medals from all over the world including the Padma Shree and Padma Vibhushana. Salim Ali was a true nature lover and his love for the wildlife is expressed in his autobiography. 'The Fall of a Sparrow' where he calls the wildlife a capital, an asset and says, "The interest on the capital must be used, while leaving capital itself in tact. This is how I interpret wildlife conversation and believe the future generation should enjoy the sam fun with it that I had." The birdman is survived by his books on birds that a small group of people use to enjoy birding and endeavour for the conservation of the wildlife. Dr. Ali is no more but his legacy lives on.
