King Santanu rules over the kingdom of Hastinapur. He had married a beautiful queen. She had agreed to marry him on a very strange condition, “Dear king, never ask me who I am. Never question any of my actions. If you fulfil my conditions, I will marry you. But if you, break your promise, I will have to leave you.” She warned. The king agreed eagerly and they married. After sometime, she gave birth to a son. The king became very happy, but he was shocked to see his wife throw the baby into the swirling waters. The king was horrified but could do nothing as he had given the promise. But to his horror, every time a son was born, she would throw the new born child into the river. When the eighth son was born, Shantanu dashed after the queen to the riverside and shouted, “Stop! Are you a human being or demon in disguise?” She looked at Shantanu sadly and said, “Oh dear, you have broken your promise. I cannot stay with you anymore. Seeing his distress, she said, “I am Goddess Ganga.”
